A PROPOSAL FOR THE MINOR IN HEBREW LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE

The Department of Religion herewith proposes a minor in Hebrew Language and Literature.

In the early 20th century the Hebrew language, with its long written history and rich associations, stirred from a two thousand-year slumber. The academic field of Hebrew first emerged in the Renaissance, and its marriage with literature started with the analysis of Biblical poetics in the late 17th century. A number of professional journals (such as Leshonenu or Hebrew Studies) are devoted to the subject; there is a National Association of Professors of Hebrew; and, the Academy of the Hebrew Language, the Jerusalem equivalent to the French language academy, issues a stream of publications, increasingly digital, on the language alone. The number of journals publishing in the fields of Hebrew language or literature is vast. The study of the Hebrew language warrants recognition as a distinct disciplinary endeavor.

This minor offers a comprehensive program for a lifetime of learning. It gives students the proficiency for one-on-one interactions with other Hebrew speakers. Modern Israel's cultural mélange has drawn vibrancy from the Diaspora and cultures with which it is in contact. The minor allows students access to primary texts of three world religions and related literatures emerging from other cultures. Hebrew is above all valuable for those who love literature and history on a broad canvas. The very language is a natural gateway to the structure and vocabulary of related languages (including Arabic, Ethiopic, Aramaic, Syriac, Phoenician/Punic and others), as well as a linguistic study in itself. It satisfies a litany of intellectual aspirations, some inescapably resonant, such as canon, others more particular, such as liturgy, some specialized, such as linguistics and technology (and associated business). Its constituency of students embraces elements across the Humanities and Social Sciences, but especially cultural anthropology, history, linguistics, religion, sociology, philosophy, and comparative literature. A full-time lecturer will offer all courses necessary for the minor.

Minor— Hebrew Language and Literature

- A minor must contain at least 9 hours of upper division course work.
- Courses taken to satisfy Core Areas I through V may not be counted as course work in the minor.
- Courses taken in Core Area VI may be counted as course work in the minor.

The minor in Hebrew Language and Literature gives students the training and skills to access unconventional worlds. By offering courses ranging from basic grammar and literacy to immersive classes in spoken and digital Hebrew, the minor prepares them to explore and evaluate the intricacies and many valences of Judaism, modern Israel, and the history and culture of each. The preparation extends to the Bible and its legacies, literature, and language itself.

Undergraduates minoring in Hebrew Language and Literature are expected to satisfy the requirements for the prerequisite courses and complete the required course and four electives.
